MENS HEALTH AWARENESS

November is Men's Health Month; a month dedicated to raising awareness of men's health and opening important conversations on a wide range of men's health issues. You may have heard it being called Movember, but it's a month to ensure we provide the outlets for men to reach out to talk, as well give the support to those who may be struggling.

As part of Movember this year, they're raising awareness of Men's Mental Health through 'Move for Mental Health' the initiative that remembers the 60 men lost to suicide globally, every hour. To take part, all you have to do is run or walk 60km. Cover the distance in one go or over the month. Move gives you the push to get you off the couch. Reconnect with the outdoors. Get in some fresh air, and take back the hours stolen by the screen.

Find out more above 'Move for Mental Health' and ways for you to support the men at work, at home or in your community here:

The important thing to remember is, Movember is just a month; this support and topic needs to be discussed year-round.

STRESS AWARENESS DAY

November 2nd is Stress Awareness Day; a day to raise awareness of the effects of psychological distress in the workplace and strategies to address it. There are many activities that can help to reduce stress during the working day, such as taking regular breaks, a lunchtime walk, as well as breathing techniques and keeping your body moving, perhaps by taking part in an online activity session.

Mental Health UK have a Wellbeing Workplan to help keep you well in your workplace.

Children in Need offers your workplace the chance to come together and raise money for a good cause. There are many ways, highlighted on the BBC Children in Need website on how you can raise money. Ideas we have come up with are:

- Completing 100 star jumps in the office.
- Join their Bearpees Challenge.
- Host a bake sale and take some time to talk with colleagues and take a break.

WORLD KINDNESS DAY/ SELF CARE WEEK

From 13th – 19th November, Self Care Week and World Kindness Day (13th Nov) is an annual, national awareness week that focuses on caring and being kind to yourself and others. This involves prioritising your own health and wellbeing and setting boundaries.

Prioritising yourself during the working day can help you be more present, motivated and productive. If you're actively managing your own stress levels and mental health, chances are you'll be more organised and grounded for the workday. So, remember to take regular screen breaks, get fresh air, check in with colleagues regularly and put movement and hydration at the top of your care list!
